With Pictures

The Infiltrators Database is a database of cases of long-term infiltrators who have targeted groups engaged in subversive activities in the 21st century. Its goal is to help anarchists and other rebels understand how infiltrators operate.

Part 1/2

Australia-Switzerland

No Trace Project / No trace, no case. A collection of tools to help anarchists and other rebels understand the capabilities of their enemies, undermine surveillance efforts, and ultimately act without getting caught.

Depending on your context, possession of certain documents may be criminalized or attract unwanted attention. Be careful about what zines you print and where you store them.

Neiva Marina Carmona Franco (Nieves, Nieves López Medina), 2023–2024

Origin: Police

Neiva Marina Carmona Franco infiltrated environmentalist groups in Madrid, including the local branches of Extinction Rebellion and Fridays for Future. She participated in civil disobedience actions. She had an official ID card under her fake name.

She was quickly suspected of being an infiltrator because she exhibited suspicious behavior, such as not having a social media presence. She was identified when members of Extinction Rebellion used a photocopy of her ID card to request a birth certificate from the city where she claimed to have been born, and discovered that she wasn't in the city's registry.

María Victoria Canillas Sánchez (Mavi), 2022–2023

Origin: Police

María Victoria Canillas Sánchez infiltrated groups in Madrid, including social centers and the local branch of the environmentalist group Extinction Rebellion. She first infiltrated a gym in a social center before moving on to other groups. She attended meetings. She had a sexual relationship with one of her targets.

She was identified partly because:

- She seemed at ease with contact sports despite claiming she had never practiced any.
- She had a very flattering attitude towards people, and she changed her opinion depending on who she spoke to.
- Pictures of her under her assumed identity matched pictures of her under her real identity. The latter included pictures found on social media.

About the Infiltrators Database

The Infiltrators Database is a searchable database of cases of long-term infiltrators who have targeted groups engaged in subversive activities in the 21st century. Its goal is to help anarchists and other rebels understand how infiltrators operate.

Inclusion criteria

To be included in the database, a case must be:

- About an infiltrator,¹ not an informant.² The infiltrator joined groups that they were not part of before the infiltration.
- Long-term. The infiltration lasted at least three months, throughout which the infiltrator maintained a consistent cover identity.
- Targeting groups engaged in subversive activities. This excludes infiltration targeting right-wing organizations, most political parties, and commercial companies.
- In the 21st century. All or part of the infiltration occurred after or during the year 2000.
- Well documented. There is a minimum amount of information available about where, when, and how the infiltration took place. Mere mention of an infiltration case in a news article or court document is not enough.

Lucía Rodríguez de Ves (María Peres, María Lucía Rodríguez Peres), 2020–2023

Origin: Police

Lucía Rodríguez de Ves infiltrated groups in Madrid, including the antifascist group Distrito 104, the Movimiento Antirrepresivo de Madrid (Madrid Anti-Repression Movement), and social centers. She first infiltrated a gym before moving on to other groups. She attended many events and demonstrations and participated in civil disobedience actions and riots.

She was identified partly because:

- Her fake and real names were similar: both contained the name “Lucía Rodríguez.”
- Pictures of her under her assumed identity matched pictures of her under her real identity. The latter included pictures posted by her real relatives on social media in which she appeared.

Austria

Unknown name (Danielle Durand, Dani), 2007–2008

Origin: Police

“Danielle Durand” infiltrated animal rights groups in Austria, including Verein gegen Tierfabriken (VGT, Association Against Factory Farming). She also attended events in the Netherlands and Switzerland. She attended meetings, demonstrations, and other events, and participated in civil disobedience actions. She formed friendships with her targets. On one occasion, she took two water bottles used by activists and gave them to the police so that they could collect the activists' DNA on the bottles. She had a sexual relationship with one of her targets. Her infiltration contributed to the prosecution of 13 activists, though they were all ultimately acquitted.

Canada

Bindo Showan (Khalid Mohammed), 2008–2010

Origin: Police

Bindo Showan infiltrated groups in Ontario, including Southern Ontario Anarchist Resistance (SOAR). He was tasked with infiltrating anarchist groups organizing against the 2010 G20 Toronto summit. He first infiltrated a group organizing against the construction of a business park before moving on to infiltrate SOAR, the main anarchist group organizing against the G20. He attended meetings. Information he gathered helped incriminate SOAR participants.

He was identified because:

- He exhibited suspicious behavior, such as discussing illegal activities in inappropriate contexts and not stopping when asked to stop.
- An activist “saw something suspicious” on his phone.

Ignacio José Enseñat Guerra (Marc Hernández Pon), 2020–2022

Origin: Police

Ignacio José Enseñat Guerra infiltrated groups in Barcelona, including groups advocating for housing rights and a student union. He attended meetings and demonstrations and participated in civil disobedience actions. He had an official ID card under his fake name, which he used to open a bank account and conduct other administrative procedures.

He was identified partly because:

- His accent did not match the region of Spain from which he claimed to be from.
- An apartment he claimed belonged to his uncle was listed in public records as owned by a company and intended for tourist accommodation.
- Pictures of him under his assumed identity matched pictures of him under his real identity.

Carlos Pérez Moreno (Juancar, Juan Carlos Pérez Romero), 2020–2022

Origin: Police

Carlos Pérez Moreno infiltrated groups in Madrid, including the antifascist group Distrito 14. He first infiltrated a gym before moving on to other groups. He attended demonstrations and participated in actions. On some occasions, he and another infiltrator, Sergio Gigirey Amado (p. 35), participated in the same actions.

He was identified partly because:

- When people visited the apartment he claimed to live in, the tap water was brown, as if no one lived there.
- Despite claiming to work for an air conditioning installation company, he often attended political events during work hours.

Unknown names (Kat and Alex), 2014–2015

Origin: Unknown

“Kat” and “Alex” infiltrated the Toronto-based Mining Injustice Solidarity Network (MISN). Claiming to be a couple, they attended a few meetings and tried to find out what MISN was planning in opposition to the 2015 Pan American Games. Kat claimed to be a survivor of abuse in order to avoid answering questions about her past.

They were identified because:

- They exhibited suspicious behavior, such as asking suspicious questions and having suspicious social media profiles.
- One day, a person who suspected they were infiltrators followed them into a subway station. After noticing the person following them, Alex appeared to talk on the phone. Shortly after, two police cars arrived, and police officers ran out of the cars and into the station, as if they had been waiting nearby to protect Kat and Alex in case something went wrong and Alex had called them to ask them to intervene.

- An employer for whom he claimed to work denied employing him.

Origin: Police

Sergio Gigirey Amado infiltrated groups in Madrid, including the antifascist group Distrito 14, and the Movimiento Antirrepresivo de Madrid (Madrid Anti-Repression Movement). He first infiltrated a food bank before moving on to other groups. He attended meetings and participated in civil disobedience actions. On some occasions, he and another infiltrator, Carlos Pérez Moreno (p. 37), participated in the same actions. He shared an apartment with some of his targets and was in a romantic and sexual relationship with one of his targets for several years.

He was identified partly because:

- Pictures of him under his assumed identity matched pictures of him under his real identity. The latter included a video from his police graduation ceremony and a picture from a race for which he registered under his real name.

- A journalist investigating the story could not find Kat or Alex in public legal records and could not confirm that Kat lived in the neighborhood she claimed to live in, despite knocking on doors and talking to people in the neighborhood.

Origin: Police

María Ángeles Gómez Armendáriz infiltrated many groups in Madrid, including Madres Contra la Represión (Mothers Against Repression) and other anti-fascist and anti-repression groups. She attended meetings and demonstrations. She had an official ID card under her fake name.

She was identified partly because:

- When asked about her work history, she evaded the question and did not answer.
- When asked if she was an infiltrator, she did not deny the accusation.

France

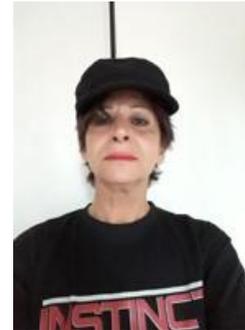

Unknown name (Dan, Dan Boro, Rose, Rose des sables, Clara, Besse), 2019

Origin: Unknown

“Dan” infiltrated groups in France, including groups participating in the grassroots “yellow vests” protests and groups organizing against the 2019 G7 Biarritz summit. She attended meetings and helped organize demonstrations and other events.

She was identified because:

- During a meeting, activists noticed that she was discreetly taking pictures with her phone.
- Activists then seized the phone and found that she had taken many pictures of meetings, demonstrations, and actions, and was sending information about activists to a supervisor.

Luis Castilla Pérez (Luis Garcia Torres), 2011–2012

Origin: Police

Luis Castilla Pérez infiltrated groups in Seville, including anti-austerity and anarchist groups, and social centers. He attended meetings and events. He had an official ID card under his fake name.

He was identified because:

- Activists began to suspect that he was an infiltrator because he was very active in their groups, yet no one knew much about him.
- When asked to show that he wasn't an infiltrator, he failed to do so and disappeared in very suspicious circumstances.

Alfonso Collado Corrales (David García Martín), 2000–2003

Origin: Police

Alfonso Collado Corrales infiltrated groups in Madrid, including anti-globalization groups and social centers. He also attended a demonstration in Italy.

The infiltration case was made public in 2025 when a journalist published a book about it. The journalist intended to keep the infiltrator's real name secret but, in interviews to promote the book, let details slip that allowed activists to find the name.

José Manuel Iglesias Romero (Nel), 2011

Origin: Police

José Manuel Iglesias Romero infiltrated anti-globalization groups in the Asturias region. He attended meetings and demonstrations.

He was identified when someone who knew him under his real identity as a police officer recognized him by chance at a demonstration.

Germany

Manfred Schlickenrieder (Camus), 1975–2000

Origins: Corporate, Police

Manfred Schlickenrieder infiltrated a wide range of left-wing and environmentalist groups in Germany, as well as in Italy, the Netherlands, and Switzerland. In particular, he infiltrated various levels of left-wing revolutionary organizations, including the Red Army Faction in Germany and the Red Brigades in Italy. He worked for both State intelligence agencies and private companies throughout his career, including German domestic and foreign intelligence services and the security company Hakluyt, which had close links with British foreign intelligence services and provided information to the multinational oil and gas companies Shell and BP. He posed as a militant archivist, filmmaker, and translator, which allowed him to attend secret meetings, collect documents, and film interviews, meetings, demonstrations, actions, and other events. He gathered information on hundreds of activists. On one occasion, he offered to sell firearms to members of a clandestine communist party, and asked in exchange to know what the firearms would be used for.

Origin: Police

“Fernando Pérez López” infiltrated groups in Madrid. He first infiltrated prisoner support groups, before moving on to infiltrate the urban guerrilla Marxist-Leninist group First of October Anti-Fascist Resistance Groups (Grupos de Resistencia Antifascista Primero de Octubre, GRAPO). He attended and helped organize events and demonstrations. On one occasion, he introduced to other activists a woman whom he claimed was his mother, though she likely wasn't, as well as people whom he claimed were his friends, though they likely weren't. His infiltration led to the arrest of GRAPO members.

Unknown name (Kirsti Weiß), 1998–2002

Origin: Police

“Kirsti Weiß” infiltrated groups in Hanover, including student and anti-nuclear groups. She attended meetings, participated in actions, and helped organize events. For part of her infiltration, she lived in a shared apartment with other activists. On one occasion, she introduced to other activists a man who she claimed was her brother. She had a passport and other documents under her fake name.

She was identified when, a few months after the end of her infiltration, she revealed to a friend that she was an infiltrator.

Kristian Krumbeck (Christian Trott), 2003–2004

Origin: Police

Kristian Krumbeck infiltrated left-wing groups in Hamburg. He attended actions, demonstrations and meetings.

He was identified because:

- He was recognized by chance during an action by someone who knew he was a police officer.
- The person who recognized him during the action also recognized him in pictures of him under his assumed identity.
- People who knew him under his assumed identity recognized him in pictures of him under his real identity.

Kristian Krumbeck in his high school newspaper, ca. 1998.

Norway

Christian Høibø, 2002–2012

Origin: Civilian

Christian Høibø infiltrated left-wing groups and a social center in Norway. He also attended demonstrations in Denmark and Germany. He initially began the infiltration for his own purposes—to gather information for his work as a journalist—and, in 2002, was recruited by the police to work as an infiltrator for them. He attended meetings and participated in demonstrations.

In 2013, he publicly revealed that he had been an infiltrator. The police confirmed that he had indeed worked for them as an infiltrator.

Simon Bromma (Simon Brenner), 2009–2010

Origin: Police

Simon Bromma infiltrated left-wing and anti-fascist groups in Heidelberg. He also attended an event in Belgium. He first infiltrated a student group before moving on to other groups. He participated in demonstrations.

He was identified because:

- Before the infiltration began, while on vacation in France, he told a person that he was a police officer.

- In 2010, this person traveled to Heidelberg to visit a friend from left-wing circles. They met Simon Bromma by chance at a party, and warned their friend that he was a police officer.
- The next day, when confronted with the accusation that he was a police officer, he admitted to being an infiltrator.

Maria Böhmichen (Maria Block), 2009–2012

Origin: Police

Maria Böhmichen infiltrated anti-racist and anti-fascist groups in Hamburg. She also attended events and demonstrations in Belgium, Denmark, France, and Greece. She attended and helped organize events and demonstrations. She also attended social events in public places and private homes. She had sexual relationships with two of her targets.

New Zealand

Rob Gilchrist, 2003–2008

Origin: Civilian

Rob Gilchrist infiltrated groups in New Zealand, including environmentalist, animal rights, and anti-war groups. He worked for the police. He attended hundreds of meetings, demonstrations and other events. On several occasions, he accused other activists of being infiltrators. He had romantic and sexual relationships with his targets, including one that lasted four years. He carried out the infiltration under his own name.

He was identified because:

- He asked his activist girlfriend to fix a problem with his computer.
- While trying to fix the computer, his girlfriend discovered that he had been sending suspicious emails containing information about activist groups.

Gerrit Greimann, 2016–2018

Origin: Civilian

Gerrit Greimann infiltrated left-wing groups in Göttingen. He worked for a German intelligence agency. He participated in anti-fascist groups and student groups. He carried out the infiltration under his real name.

He was identified after a request for information was made to a German intelligence agency and the agency inadvertently responded with unredacted files which revealed his identity.

Ralf Gross, 2012–2013

Origin: Civilian

Ralf Gross infiltrated animal liberation, environmentalist, anti-repression, and anti-fascist groups in Germany. He worked for the police. He attended events and demonstrations, and participated in actions. On one occasion, the morning after an arson attack, he called an activist and asked if he had slept well, presumably to determine whether he had participated in the attack. He carried out the infiltration under his real name.

He was identified because:

- He exhibited suspicious behavior, which led activists to suspect him. For example:

- He had meat in his refrigerator and kept dogs in a kennel at his home, which was suspicious considering he participated in animal liberation groups.
- He reacted suspiciously when someone asked to borrow his laptop.
- Activists gained access to his email account and discovered that he had sent suspicious emails.
- Activists gained access to his Facebook account and found private messages in which he expressed disdain for animal liberation actions.
- In an attempt to confirm that he was an infiltrator, activists told him about a fake clandestine action, and later recorded a phone conversation in his car during which he gave information about the action to an unknown person.
- When confronted with the accusation that he was a spy, he tried to deny it, but he was not convincing at all.
